In the course of this little treatise I shall also occasionally examine, whether there be any essential difference between the sexes which can authorize the superiority the men claim over the women ; and what are the causes of. . . the seeming difference which makes the sum of their plea. And if upon mature consideration, it appears there is no other difference between Men and Us, than what their tyranny has created, it will then appear how unjust they are in excluding us from that power and dignity we have a right to share with them; how ungenerous in denying us the equality of esteem which is our due; and how little reason they have to triumph in the base possession of an authority, which unnatural violence, and lawless usurpation, put into their hands. Then let them justify, if they can, the little meannesses, not to mention the grosser barbarities, which they daily practise towards that part of the creation, whose happiness is so inseparably linked with their own.

Sophia, Woman, Not Inferior to Man, 1739Read this document and answer the following questions:

- 1) Explain the reasons used by men to justify their superiority to women in the 18th century.
- 2) In what ways was this superiority translated in women's everyday life in that period? Explain.
- 3) Explain how and when women were given access to political power.
